AN ENGLISH HOME.
A tranquil English home, grown old and gray,
Embraced and shadowed by ancestral trees,
Where early summer breezes sigh and sway,
With a soft scented breeze.
Dark oaks piled with foliage thick and moss,
Keep a green twilight through airy bowers,
And showers of wild rose petals drift across
Bright paths and sunny nooks.
And clear bird music, melodiously sweet,
Rings through the bowery shades from early dawn
Till evening, while busy children's feet
Traverse the level lawn.
And faithfully, the church bells' blessed chime
Repeats the ancient message soft and light,
Saying, "Look upwards to a fairer clime—
For this is not your rest."
Yet here swift human hearts forget to roam,
The world's wild tumult and low ebb and gain,
Harrowing the clinging affections to foam,
Against its fleshly chain.
The polished words that hide the inward thought,
The smooth words that soothe the restless soul,
Have the fire spirit taken as Nature taught,
With simple "yes" and "no."
But still "look upward" claims the solemn bells;
Look upward, even from those cloistered bowers,
So beautiful with morning's golden spells,
And evening's dew-drenched flowers.
Above the windy tree-tops, far above
The fair clouds, while in ocean's drifting foam,
Above the tremulous star-gazes, you love—
There is the soul's true home.
Here are the Eden bowers that Ha ha blest,
The earthly paradise of joy and rest,
There is the city of eternal rest.
A land sustained by tears.

WINNING AN INDIAN WIFE.
In front of the house of the head chief of Clayquot, on the western shores of Vancouver Island, is a large stone. When a young man "meets papa in the library"—in other words, proposes for one of the Western Sparrows' daughters, he is to go to the large stone, and if he cannot lift and carry it, he is with honors and content, dismissed as ineligible to such a dignitary's daughter! The wife is in most cases kindly treated, the husband seldom beating her, except when intoxicated, and though a drudge, yet she has a voice in every bargain, and prudent travelers are generally wise enough to buy goods well before commencing to transact business with the husband.—Canal's Races of Alameda.

"FROM GREENLAND'S TOY MOUNTAINS."
It is singular that Bishop Heber forms a connecting link between Malpas and Wrexham, which carries our thoughts at once across the intervening valley, from the one to the other. When he was a young man, missionary sermons were not so frequent as they are now, and on one occasion, when he was staying with John Sirrey, Vicar of Wrexham, his father-in-law, such a sermon was to be preached, and the want of a suitable hymn was felt. He was asked on the Saturday to write one, and, seated at a window of the old vicarage house, he produced, after a short interval, in his clear handwriting, with one single word corrected, that hymn beginning, "From Greenland's toy mountains, with which we are all familiar. It was printed in the Wrexham Church, and the following day in Wrexham Church. The writer of these pages on the Deo saw the original manuscript some years ago in Liverpool, and more recently he has seen the printer, still living in Wrexham, who set up the type when a boy.—Deeds of Women, is the Art Journal.

THE CAD OF THE LONDON STREETS.
He is not confined to any particular class of society, but the street Cad is rarely encountered but one representative of the class, living, snaking, selfish family. You meet the thing which pestered Clyde most frequently west of Temple Bar. He delights to walk in Belgrave. Bond-street and the Row are his special haunts. The most despicable form of the cad is the two-legged animal that walks from the slums, with round arms and insolent swagger, and seems devoted to the amusement of annoying respectable women and girls who find themselves alone in the West-end streets. Poor Clyde! this eye-glassed, stylized thing, called a fashionable man, this haw-hawing, blue-eyed nonentity, sorely beset her, filling her with fear, and bringing the tears into her eyes. It is true that she had been accustomed to admiration in Dunelm, but the rude, vulgar, leering stare of the London cad in state was a new and terrible sensation to her. It almost frightened her as much as the other scared Mr. Kingsley's Water-baby. I wonder honest men with wives and sisters, honest men who honour their mothers, have not long ago united themselves in a vow to exterminate this creeping vermin of the streets, which is a blot upon manhood and a curse to society.—Gentleman's Magazine.

COOLNESS AND COURAGE.
The roar of a aged lion will make a deep impression on a nervous person; but a cool sportsman who has shot these animals at foot will be quite unconcerned. A sudden dash, with loud shouts, may strike young recruits with awe, but will be despised by the old soldier. The latter know the value of steadiness and correct aims, and will not be too easily deprived of their self-possession. We should ever bear in mind in battle that the men rushing at us are after all but flesh and blood. They may show a bold front, but as they come closer and closer, so in the same proportion will their hope or dependency increase as they see you steadily or otherwise. The appearance of your steady advance or bold attitude compels an enemy to feel less and less hopeful of his power to defeat you. He becomes more and more dubious, as the distance diminishes between you, if you lie remain firm and steady. That knock of the bag, just appreciation of his adversary's strength, and "a careful calculation of his own means compared with the obstacles to be overcome," which was the basis of all Eugene's success, will be found to have been, more or less, the very basis of all success on the part of the most renowned commanders. Lord Donaldson says that Nelson's frequent injunctions were "Never mind maneuvers, always go at them," but from this we must not conclude that Nelson was rash. The same author says he considered Nelson as being "an embodiment of dauntless courage, which would not take much trouble to circumvent an enemy, but, being confronted with one, would regard victory so much a matter of course hardly to deem the chance of defeat worth consideration. This was in fact, the case, for though the enemy's ships, for the most part, were superior to ours in build, the discipline and seamanship of their crews were in that day so inferior as to leave little room for doubt of victory on our part." Again, he says, "It has been remarked that Trafalgar was a rash action, and that had Nelson lost it and lived he would have been brought to a court-martial, for the way in which the action was conducted." But such cavillers forget, that from previous experience he had calculated both the nature and amount of resistance to be expected; such calculation forming an essential part of his plan of attack as even his own means for making it. The result justified his expectations of victory, which were not only well founded, but certain." A more noble tribute to the character of Lord Nelson could hardly be found. He always calculated telegraphed Nelson only thought of this duty to his God, to his king, and to his country.—From "Victories and Defeats," by Colonel R. P. Anderson.

THE MOORS.

There is a considerable affinity between the customs of the Moors and those of the Christians relating to food. Thus the prohibition to eat pork is common to the religious code of both nations. It is generally believed that the Moors have adopted this from the Jews, though there is another and totally different origin assigned to it by some of the learned Moslems; which makes it a genuine and independent Mohammedan law. The story is as follows:—A wild boar that had been slain in a hunt was cut up and divided among the family of the small donor (called) near which it had been killed. One poor widow, however, was absent at the time of distribution; and coming a little after to the place where the meat was divided, found that her portion—which had been duly cut and put aside for her—had been eaten by one of her neighbors. She complained to Mohammed, who, however, was unable to restore it to her, so he cursed the thief, and at that time, from henceforth, and for evermore. As neither the widow nor any one else knew what exact bird had been eaten for her (the thief of course would not tell) Mohammedans have always since abstained from pork, as eating it they might chance to eat what the curse had been put upon their stomachs. Rumour says that some of the very learned Ancients have found out the exact part forbidden, and consequently, knowing which part to avoid, are able to eat the rest safely; but if so, they keep the secret to themselves.—From "A Winter in Morocco."

THE Attention of Shippers is called to the company's ships, for the most part, were superior to ours in build, the discipline and seamanship of their crews were in that day so inferior as to leave little room for doubt of victory on our part." Again, he says, "It has been remarked that Trafalgar was a rash action, and that had Nelson lost it and lived he would have been brought to a court-martial, for the way in which the action was conducted." But such cavillers forget, that from previous experience he had calculated both the nature and amount of resistance to be expected; such calculation forming an essential part of his plan of attack as even his own means for making it. The result justified his expectations of victory, which were not only well founded, but certain." A more noble tribute to the character of Lord Nelson could hardly be found. He always calculated telegraphed Nelson only thought of this duty to his God, to his king, and to his country.—From "Victories and Defeats," by Colonel R. P. Anderson.
